A landscape photographer can choose from mangroves and palms, to docks, beaches, bridges and rock piers as foregrounds. The many static subjects surrounded by water are perfect for adding a 10-stop neutral density filter and getting some long exposures, smoothing out the water and blurring the clouds.

Florida Photo Hot Spots - Outdoor Photographer

Great landscape photographers visit locations for years, decades even. They go back to shots they've taken five, ten, or even one hundred times. This is why location scouting can be important.

3 Tips for Scouting Landscape Photography Locations ...

A landscape photographer should be able to pick lenses based on their particular needs and their budget. Although many photographers continue to rely on DSLR cameras that have a proven track record for landscape photography needs, some are shifting towards mirrorless systems.
